This was Thursday. Every Thursday night there was a prayer meeting held in the sum of the su ated a mile from Miss Faithful's house, cause they liked it, but because Miss Faithfut, who was a devout member of the congregation, was afraul to leave them at home, for fear they would burn the house down or commit some other desperate deed of a like nature.

"Please let us stay home to-night, aunt?" pleaded Andy, as he sat with her at supper, while Pop slowly polished tins at the sink, averaging a rub every two or three minutes.
